Cedar Field Park artists

Holly Henning

Is an artist, muralist, jingle dress dancer, and advocate based in the Twin Cities. She is an enrolled member of Marten Falls First Nation. She also has family ties to Constance Lake First Nation. She blends new and traditional Native art to tell Indigenous stories and honor her culture. Her work calls for change and speaks out against racism and injustice. Holly has helped create murals and public art in the United States, Canada, Africa, and Mexico. Her art shows who we are, how we connect, and where we belong. She also works with nonprofits to help people in crisis and support community healing.

Willard Malebear

Is a Lakota artist and tattoo artist based in Minneapolis. He founded Art Shelf and is a 2026 Bush Fellow. After facing addiction and time in prison, Willard turned to art as a way to heal and connect with others. He now helps others do the same through his tattoo studio, nonprofit work, and prison arts programs. He also works with Indigenous communities. His work brings art, culture, and wellness together to help people heal and change their lives.

Rock Martinez

Is a spray paint artist and muralist known around the world. He also leads art projects. For more than 20 years, he has made large works of art in public spaces. He paints murals, makes art for businesses, and works with communities in the United States and abroad. He uses bold colors and fine details to tell stories, honor culture, and bring people together. His art helps people connect with the places they live. You can find his work in museums, airports, and other public spaces. He is known for his skill and his close work with communities.
